

STAMFORD LIFE

WEEKLY STAMFORD NEWS

21 October 2016

ANOTHER WIN FOR STAMFORD

Primary Students poses with the teachers after winning the Speaking from the Heart 2016 English Storytelling Contest

Speaking from the Heart 2016

On the 15th of October, Stamford hosted the Fifth Annual English Storytelling Competition. Students from all schools in Bandung were free to participate in the competition. The storytelling contest was divided into different age groups: five years & below, eight years & below, eleven years & below, fourteen years & below and seventeen years & below. The contest was held in two different areas of the school which include the library and also the pre-school area.

This year, just like the previous two years, it was an honor for Stamfordians to have won in the English Storytelling Competition. Many Stamfordians worked hard for the day and their hard work did not go to waste as many of them went home with trophies in their hands. Many congratulations to winners of the day and hopefully as many students will participate in next year's competition.

By: Jennifer S4

By: William KL of S4

We would also like to congratulate our writers Kyle & Jennifer, who their team won 1st for the 17th & below category

UPCOMING EVENTS

- Halloween Party 21 October 2016

A Day of Fun

On the 14th of October 2016, Stamford School held the Batik and Children's Day celebration. The day was filled with fun and games. All of the students showed up looking neat with their batik outfits on. The day started off with a presentation by the Indonesian teachers about batik, which is a cultural heritage belonging to Indonesia. Directly after that, there were performances by each class. The acts ranged from dramas to songs and dances. Each class put on marvelous performances and it showed that they worked very hard to provide such quality. After the performances, all the students got a chance to play the games at each stall. There were many stalls that were prepared by each class and each stall had small carnival-style games with prizes. Some of the games included bowling, tower-building and ping-pong toss.

P3 students performing for Batik & Students Day

All the stalls showed immense creativity with all their interesting games. A student could play a game for one ticket. The tickets could be bought and all the profits made during the event was donated to charity. The day was a success and all the students went home with a smile, having had fun throughout the day.

By: Kyle S4

Monster

His name was Daniel Kang and he is a monster. A particular kind of monster. One who knows what he exactly is, one who knows every inch of what he had become. One who knew how cold blooded he was, and how cold blooded he is willing to be. One who was aware of his sins. One who understood the ways in which pieces of regrets and his conscience jab at him. One who transcended from doing no harm to doing harm.

He wasn't your ordinary monster. No. He wasn't the kind of monster who'll hurt you himself, no. He was an enabler. An enabler of other monsters that would hurt not just you, but everyone you love. Although he was an MBA, his genius was in manipulation and engineering; coercion and instruments of it if you prefer.

That was what Daniel Kang does, manipulating and engineering other monsters that were used for corruption and terrorism. Engineering machines of no purpose except destabilization. Sometimes even for profit, and he was the best at it. He was born to do it. And he did it on a massive scale.

Global.

Monumental.

Historical.

But no one knew who he was, or what he does except him. He never appears in any most wanted lists, on the news or on TV. Only he knew what he was. He was a particular kind of monster. A ghost. A ghost in the machines of death and despair. A machine that keeps running even in the case that its operators are gone. A machine that ran and ran. Primed and ready. Ticking. Ticking. Waiting to turn the lights off.

By: Athaa S4